Joseph H. Nichols. And have ye struck at last to conquering Age Your green broad pennons that so bravely waved Ye should have fallen on Ocean, in the rage Of storm and battle, by blue waters laved, Where mortal thunders might with Heavens engage In dirges oer your honor only saved. Yet though the lands your tomb, I love ye well, For, had ye tongues, what stories might ye tell! Many and many a time have ye looked down, When chimed the bells, on the prayer gathering, From days when young forms wore the flower-wreathed gown Till now, crowned with an almond blossoming, All youthful traces, save deep piety, flown, Their childrens children to the organ sing, And, seated by them, words of comfort hear, With cherub cheeks composed in holy fear. Oft have ye viewed the bridegroom and his bride Midst circling friends exchange the ring of love, j Thoughtless that ere a twelve-month past should glide, i The climbing school-boy from the willow tree above t Would see both babe and mother, side by side, j And him lone mourner like a mateless dove i Bend oer the turf, and in the fitful lack Of reason try, poor thing! to call them back. , Strange are the sights yeve witnessed in your day When ye were plantad what was this our land J A royal vassaL Oh, look now and say, j How spoke, how...
