Not illustrated. 1794 Excerpt: . to eight inches $ the Sycamore and Elm, at one year, from twelve to eighteen inches; the Larch j at two years, from eight to eighteen inches; and the Scotch Fir, of two years, picked out, from four to seven inches: in drawing these severally from the seed bed, I must observe that all under the above sizes I had sorted out, and set in rows for the next year s planting: after binding up such as were fit to make use of in hundreds, and packing them in mats, I sent them by the waggon to Sheffield, at eighteen pence per hundred N 2 weight. weight. The largest quantity I ever sent was forty thousand, which weighed eleven hundred weight. The roots in general, from their growing close in the seed-bed, did not want much trimming, except of the matted parts: they had struck downward, and were so much of the tap-kind, as to have been any of them planted with a setting stick in light ground. I therefore determined to make my holes with a pick instead of a spade; with the first stroke of which the sod (whether of turf or moss) was removed, and by the second a hole was made of sufficient depth for the plant: if a small stone was hit upon, it was easily taken out, and thq hole became more ample; if a larger presented itself, or was struck upon, the edge of it was sought for...
